10:00 – 11:00 11:00 – 11:30	The aspirations and expectations of citizens for reform and development, poignantly articulated as a call for a new social contract between State and society, ultimately rest on the capacity of national public administration systems to translate the promise of resilient and inclusive governance institutions into jobs, security, service delivery and sustainable development. This session will consider the findings of two commissioned papers that examine, respectively, the challenges and opportunities for transformative change and the political economy of reform across the Arab region. Participants will address but are not limited to the following questions: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• What are the institutional hurdles that must be overcome to achieve transformative change in public administration systems, and how to effectively address them?</li> <li>• What principles should inform effective change governance strategy and what dilemmas are likely to need addressing?</li> <li>• Are there specific or system-wide priorities and sequencing considerations in reforming public administration structures, systems, processes and values?</li> <li>• How will strategies and measures to strengthen public administration systems vary between national and local levels of government?</li> </ul> Chair: Zena Ali Ahmad, Country Director, UNDP Jordan Panel Speakers: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Mark Evans, Director and Professor of Governance, University of Canberra - Presentation of study on Public Administration Reform in the Arab Transitions</li> <li>2. Jakob Wichmann, co-author of study on The Political Economy of Public Administration – A Study of the Arab Transitions</li> <li>3. Ra’ed Mohammed BenShams, Director General, Bahrain Institute of Public Administration (BIPA) – The Case for Collaboration to Achieve Public Administration Excellence in the Arab Region</li> <li>4. H.E. The session will take the point of view of decision-makers in the public administration and focus on the role of State institutions in identifying and disseminating innovative practices to improve the lives of citizens. Focus will be on two different approaches to public service innovation from the perspective of public institutions: (i) the role of public institutions as a partner for social innovators and; (ii) the role of public institutions as a potential incubator for new ideas to solve societal challenges. The session will build on a social innovation workshop taking place prior to the conference. Key questions for consideration include:

Tuesday 27 October: Challenges and Priorities for the Role of the Public Administration in Complex Environments

09:00 – 09:15	Recap of Day 1 and Introduction to Day 2
09:15 – 10:30	PLENARY SESSION 5  The Role of Public Administration in Fragile, Crisis and Post-Crisis Environments The capacity and role of public administration in settings impacted by fragility or outright conflict is of critical importance to building stable, just and inclusive societies that can sustain peace in the long term. However, this is a recent recognition in both research and support provided by the international community which has traditionally focused its support on political processes and security issues. The UN Secretary-General’s Report on Civilian Capacities in the Aftermath of Conflict identifies five core functions of the public administration (i.e. “Core Government Functions”) for well-targeted support in crisis settings: (i) civil service management; (ii) policy formulation and public financial management; (iii) managing the centre of government (e.g. Cabinet Offices, Prime Minister’s or President’s Offices); (iv) local governance and; (v) aid management. The United Nations distinguishes between “core” or “basic” public administration functions—the “plumbing and wiring” aspects of government—which are precursors to policy implementation on one hand, and service delivery functions on the other. Key questions for consideration include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• What are the Core Public Admin Functions (Core Government Functions) that, based on input from across the region and lessons from other regions, should be prioritized in crisis settings?</li> <li>• What should drive public administration reform in fragile environments: targeted approach on core government functions, a more comprehensive whole-of-government strategy, or a hybrid of the two?</li> <li>• Means to consolidate the shift from subordinated and centralized bureaucracies to public administration reforms based on organisational effectiveness for transparent and accountable service delivery and excellence in public service performance?</li> </ul> Chair: Sultan Barakat, Head of the Post-War Reconstruction Center at York University and Head of the Brookings Institute in Doha 09:15 – 10:00 Panel Speakers <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. H.E. 13:30 – 15:15	PLENARY SESSION 7 Modernizing towards service-oriented public institutions that build trust between State and society: inclusion, integrity and a high-performing civil service The capacity of governments to provide public goods and services that meet citizen demands and expectations rests firmly on a skilled civil service that is impartial and effective in performing its functions. How this workforce is constructed and institutionalized is both the art and science of civil service reform. Political leaders must weigh critical political and technical design factors—ranging from the rightsizing, lustration, integrity measures and the fiscal sustainability of the public sector workforce to considerations of professional development, employee motivation, and performance evaluations—that determine the capacity of government to fulfill its policy making and service delivery functions with quality, openness, responsiveness, and responsibility. The session will explore in particular the role of the civil service in transition and crisis settings. Aspects such as compressed time horizons, unrealistic expectations, resource limitations, bureaucratic uncertainty and the need for social cohesion are a few of the special considerations that impact the speed and sequencing of civil service reforms. The session will also focus on the role of the public administration in building trust between the State and society (including policies, guidelines, practices), through enhancing transparency and accountability measures as well as improving aid absorption capacity, managing public finances and the cost of public administration reform (including planning, reporting and evaluation), and modernizing heavily bureaucratic public systems. The presentations and discussion will yield lessons and useful comparisons across regional experiences, as well as inform future UNDP and partner efforts regarding the role of the public administration in building increased trust between State and society. Key questions include: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> <li>• How can the human resource management of the civil service be modernized while parting from severely politicized or dysfunctional systems, and what measures, including incentives and sanctions, can be put in place to rapidly develop capacity and change behavior towards striving for excellence in public service?</li> <li>• What is the appropriate balance for civil service reform between meritocracy provisions and inclusion quotas to ensure representation of marginalized groups (e.g., women, ethnic minorities, youth, etc.) at all levels of the civil service including in decision-making positions?</li> <li>• Are the goals of civil service capacity, efficiency and sustainability better served by continuity of workforce or lustration laws/ measures (whether de jure or de facto)</li> </ul>
